

JAJA'S AFRICAN HAIR BRAIDING

STEP INTO THE INCREDIBLE WORLD OF HAIR BRAIDING ARTISTS

Every day in Jaja's Harlem hair braiding salon, a feisty and eclectic group of West African immigrant hair braiders creates remarkable works of art for neighborhood women. During a sweltering summer day, love will blossom, dreams will thrive and secrets will be divulged. The uncertainty of their circumstances simmers below the surface of their lives and when it boils over, it compels this tight-knit community to face what it means to be an outsider on the edge of the place they call home.

Directed by Obie winner Whitney White (Our Dear Dead Drug Lord), this extraordinary new play is by the award winning Ghanaian-American playwright Jocelyn Bioh (The Public Theater's Merry Wives; School Girls; Or, The African Mean Girls Play).
