“EXTRAORDINARILY MOVING DRAMA”

--The New York Times

From the hit run at The Public Theater comes a new political drama exploring America's industrial decline by the Pulitzer-Prize-winning playwright of Ruined, Lynn Nottage.

Full of warm humor and great heart, this groundbreaking new play focuses on a group of friends who have spent their lives sharing secrets, laughs and drinks while working together in a factory. When layoffs and picket lines begin to erode their trust and break their close ties, they find themselves pitted against each other in a heartbreaking struggle to survive.

SWEAT is a “scorching, superb and vital contribution to contemporary drama” (The New York Times) dealing with the involvement of race, class, family and friendship in a Pennsylvania town where prospects are disappearing.
